Question 1

Read carefully the poem in which the poet describes being separated from her son when he goes to live with his father on the other side of the world.

On a Son Returned to New Zealand

He is my green branch growing in a far plantation.
He is my first invention.

No one can be in two places at once.
So we left Athens on the same morning.
I was in a hot railway carriage, crammed between Serbian soldiers and peasant women, on sticky seats, with nothing to drink but warm mineral water.

He was in a cabin with square windows, sailing
across the Mediterranean, fast,
to Suez.

10

Then I was back in London
in the tarnished summer, remembering,
as I folded his bed up, and sent the television set away. Letters came from Aden and Singapore, late.

He was already in his father's house, on the cliff-top, where the winter storms roll across from Kapiti Island, and the flax bends before the wind. He could go no further.

20

He is my bright sea-bird on a rocky beach.

- (a) How does the poet strikingly portray the huge distance between mother and son? [15]
- (b) In what ways does the poet movingly convey her thoughts and feelings? [15]
