Section A: Augustus

Answer Question 1 and either Question 2 or Question 3.

1 Read the passage and answer the questions:

Then, O Gods, grant virtuous ways to youth ready to Learn and tranquillity to gentle elders, and, Gods,
Grant to Romulus' people, prosperity, posterity
And every glory,

And fulfil whatever by sacrifice of white oxen
He entreats, the glorious offspring of Anchises
And Venus, vanquisher of those who take up arms,
Mild to the fallen foe.

5

Now the Mede fears the forces strong by land
And sea and the Alban axes; now
The Scythians, so recently arrogant, and the Indians
Seek responses.

How far do you agree with this statement? [25]

OR

- 3 How far do you agree that Augustus was an excellent role model for future rulers? [25]

Section B: Virgil's Aeneid

Answer Question 4 and either Question 5 or Question 6.

4 Read the passage and answer the questions:

Lifting up his voice to the wide expanse of heaven, he cried: 'I call upon you, Hercules of the stock of Alceus, by my father's table and by the friendship he offered you when you came as a stranger to his home, stand at my side now as I set my hand to this great task. May Turnus as he dies see me tear the blood-stained armour off his body, and may the last sight he endures be the face of the man who has defeated him!' Hearing the young warrior, Hercules checked the great groan rising from the depths of his heart and the helpless tears streamed from his eyes. Then Father Jupiter spoke these loving words to his son: 'Each man has his allotted day. All life is brief and time once past can never be restored. But the task of the brave man is to enlarge his fame by his actions. So many sons of gods fell under the high walls of Troy, and with them fell also my son Sarpedon. Turnus too is called by his own destiny and has reached the limits of the time he has been given.' So he spoke and instantly turned his eyes away from the Rutulian fields.

(Virgil, Aeneid 10)

- (a) (i) 'he cried' (line 1). Who is speaking? [1]
- (ii) 'my father's table' (line 2). What is the name of his father? [1]
